

I would like to comment on the issue of the Low Power FM Stations, LPFM, currently being considered by the FCC. I currently listen to K-Love Radio in the Phoenix Arizona area via a translator. I have listened to and have been a financial sponsor of K-Love for many years, possibly as long as they have been broadcasting in the Phoenix area. Having K-Love as an option has been a benefit not only to myself, but my family and friends as well. Because of K-Love's format, I never have to be concerned about what my child is hearing. The music and other information is clean, positive and uplifting. I feel this station is a vital part of the community who is able to receive the signal not only due to the aforementioned benefits, but also because they are active in the community promoting community events of interest. Being a translator station K-Love is able to reach many communities with their family-friendly programming. Because a listener supported station like K-Love can garner support in the communities it serves is also evidence of the the need for such an option. Please consider keeping translator stations as a viable resource for stations such as K-Love. Thank you for your attention to this very difficult matter.
